XXII THE FATE OF COUSIN GRAY A LONG the foot of the steep bank of shelf of land that fringed the water, were many little irregular piles of clay. They stood upright on the ground, some nearly straight and some very crooked, several times as high as Tan s head. He had noticed them many times as he ran back and forth, and wondered dimly who made them and why, but as they seemed to have no bearing on his own life he never asked any questions about them. Pleasant Run creek, on the narrow He might have lived beside them all the year, passing the curious mounds every day of his life without knowing anything about them, if he had not seen another woodland tragedy enacted there. One day Tan was sitting in the mouth of the muskrat s burrow, which he...
