Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Some Antecedents of Turnover of Scientists and Engineers: April, 1968 Although turnover of scientists and engineers may sometimes be desirable, it is by and large a costly phenomenon. It is costly to the company, which has invested resources in training the person who leaves, and it is costly to the individual, who must devote his energies to becoming acclimated to his new job situation. Poor performers are not the only ones who leave their companies; in the present study, 35 of the scientists and engineers who left their companies were judged to be among the top half in usefulness to their organizations, and in one company 23 of those who left were judged to be among the top ten percent in usefulness. If turnover could be predicted in advance from information about certain factors which are subject to alteration, then companies would be in a much better position to take steps to reduce it. In this study an attempt is made to identify factors which are related to a persons subsequently leaving his company. The...
