Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from My Neighbor s Wife: A Farce, in One Act Mrs. Somerton, Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Brown arc together in the chamber of the former. The ladies are discoursing about the fickleness of husbands. Mesdames B.and S.express their disbelief ir the honor of any of the genus except their own particular partners. They commiserate with Mrs. Somerton, as her husband is so often absent, and hint that these absences are prompted by no good motive. Mrs. S., however, not only quietly defends her husband, but hints to her fair friends that they had better look at home, and adds the vii hthat they may always find their husbands faithful. They scout the idea, and are taking their leave when Mrs. S.tells them that should it so happen that their husbands did not return she would be pleased to have them drop in and take supper with her, adding that she bears them no grudge for having always thrown out insinuations against Mr.S. They bid her good-bye, and retire. She smiles as she recalls the fact that she has in her pocket notes from both the ladies husbands, in which they invite themselves to call upon her that very evening, each ignorant of the others project, but both aware that Mr.S. intends to dine out. When her husband returns Mrs. S., after making him promise not to fly In a passion, shows him the notes, and tells him of her plan to punish the gay Lothai ios, with his assistance. He assents, and puts off his dinner engagement. The two dupes arrive, and are pleasantly received bMrs. Somerton, who contrives to make each of them believe that...
