Excerpt: . . . several times over the course of these operations. It is still unclear when these critical reserve stocks will be reconstituted or how much this will cost; however, the Army has estimated it will require at least 10. 6 billion 12 to complete this reconstitution effort through 2013 (see table 1). Army officials stated that prepositioned equipment sets worldwide would be reconstituted in synchronization with the Armys overall equipping priorities, when properly funded, and in accordance with the Armys prepositioning strategy, known as the Army Prepositioned Strategy 2015. 13 We recommended in our September 2005 and February 2007 reports that DOD develop a coordinated, department-wide plan and joint doctrine for the departments prepositioning programs. Synchronizing a DOD-wide strategy with the Armys prepositioning strategy would ensure that future investments made for the Armys prepositioning program would properly align with the anticipated DOD-wide strategy. Without a DOD-wide strategy, DOD risks inconsistencies between the Armys and the other services prepositioning strategies, which may result in duplication of efforts and resources. In addition, we could...
