Its appearance was described to several old fisherman, all of whom concurred in the opinion that it was what is known amongst them as a brigdee, believed by some to be a species of basking shark. What a brigdee is however, has never been accurately determined. It is generally described as being an animal with two immense fins stretching up like wings from a body of apparently vast dimensions, and is said to have on many occasions pursued and destroyed boats at sea. Perhaps the following item may explain what a small brigdee most probably is. A fine specimen of the thresher or fox-shark (Carcharias vulpus) was thrown ashore in early November on the east side of the island of Papa Wistray, in Orkney. When cleared from the seaweed in which it was partially embedded the measurements...
